

Intrusions into my home via telephone solicitation was once a common issue, often happening several times a week. I've even been billed for a magazine subscription that my minor son was tricked into ordering. He thought he was getting a free gift (which he received) but did not know he subscribed to the magazine. Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has eliminated these intrusions and I have not ever suffered from not being contacted due to this law. From my perspective, there is absolutely no negative effect from this law. The Federal Government should NOT enact legislation that directly or indirectly weakens Indiana's Telephone Privacy law.
